How to pass a genius

All of us can't be geniuses.

But any ordinarily talented human being can be a success—and that's a lot more than some geniuses are.

Now, as in Aesop's time, the race doesn't always go to the one who potentially is the swiftest. The trained man has no trouble in passing the genius who hasn't improved his talents.

In good times and bad times, in every technical and business field, the trained man is worth a dozen untrained ones, no matter how gifted.

The International Correspondence Schools can't make you into a genius. For more than 75 years, however, ICS has been helping its students to become trained, successful leaders—and it can do the same for you.

Mark your special interest on the coupon. Don't be like the unsuccessful genius who wastes his life in dreaming of what he intends to do. Act now!

THE INSULT THAT MADE A MAN OUT OF 'MAC'

CHARLES ATLAS, World's No. 1 Body Builder, says:

Don't Be Half A Man!

Let ME SHOW How I Can Make You a Real HE-MAN From Head to Toe -- in Just 15 Minutes a Day!

Minutes a Day! Take a good honest look at yourself! Are you proud of your body — or are you satisfied to go through life being just "half the man" you could be? No matter how ashamed you are of your present physical condition — or how old or young you are — the "sleeping" muscles already present in your body can turn you into a real HE-MAN! Believe me, I know — because I was once a skinny, scrawny 97-pound half-alive weakling! People used to laugh at my build and make fun of me. I was ashamed to strip for sports or the beach . . . shy of girls . . . afraid of healthy competition.

ONCE OVER LIGHTLY

By RICHARD STEVENS

IT'S BAD ENOUGH GHOSTS haunt houses. Now, it seems, they want spots on TV, closed circuit, no less.

Five boutique salesgirls working in a Chatham, England shop claim they saw the "ghostly figure" of a woman in a long Victorian dress with a wide waistband and muff.

They said that the figure stood at the top of the stairs in the boutique occasionally waving her hand and patting her hair.

Several times the figure on the TV set walked halfway down the stairs and then went back to the upper floor of the boutique, which was converted only a few months ago from an old, abandoned house.

The girls said they switched off a juke box and moved hats and dresses around because they thought it might be a reflection, but the figure was still there.

"After it disappeared, I went up the stairs where it was standing," said one of the girls, "and at the step it was freezing cold. It was very strange because it's always very warm up there," the girl said.

A SURVEY UNDER THE HEADING, "Young Men and Their Motives," was conducted in London recently and established without a doubt that British men prefer blondes.

The survey sought to find a basis for advertising and the promotion of male fashions. It proved that despite claims to the contrary, British men have very much the same outlook as their fathers.

Interviewed in the survey were 200 males between the ages of 16 and 25.

Most did not believe in equality for women nor that the fairer sex had any place in Parliament.

Some, unlike their fathers, do not even believe a woman has a right to a seat in the bus.

Ninety-two per cent of the men said they would not marry a woman who earned more than they did and the same number would not marry a woman who was considerably more intelligent.

All of the men interviewed said they wanted a tight hand on the purse strings and none would allow their wives to take charge of the weekly wages, charge, savings or checking accounts.

As far as looks were concerned, 74 percent preferred blondes and 12 percent redheads. The balance, 14 percent, went for brunettes.

Down to the finer details, a quarter of those interviewed said they were mostly interested in legs, with faces and breasts secondary. Bottoms were not mentioned at all. The rest were mostly interested in hips and hips.

All but two per cent said they would not allow their wives to go out alone at night or wear a topless dress in public.

"IF I LIVED HERE, I'D HAVE A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN!" These were the words quipped by the group of 11 Soviet newspaper editors who took a recent trip to "Fun City," New York.

The words were spoken after the Red editors encountered the frustrations of the big city's transportation and fighting rush-hour traffic.

What jinxed the editors about the city most of all was that Mayor Lindsay told them that the average New Yorker could get to his job in just 15 minutes.

Beforehand, the Russians had waited more than 20 minutes in a cold, dirty station for a subway.

IT WOULD BE LIKE Japan without geishas or Paris without postcards.

That's what Russia would be like without vodka!

Despite a campaign against drunkenness being waged by the Communist Party and by various prohibitionists, life in the U.S.S.R. just would not be the same without the heady, clear liquid, stronger and smoother than anything the Americans could offer.

"Peyo-dona"—(drink to the bottom)—still rings out in Moscow restaurants.

Russia has no bars. Drinking is done in restaurants, at home or on the street.

"Dry Reds" have been demanding prohibition, or at least severe restrictions on the sale and production of the national drink.

Editorials in Soviet-based newspapers blame vodka for a variety of national ills, including crime.

But the "drys" face a tough battle, since Soviet youths learn to drink early, and it's considered a sign of maturity.

A BROOKLYN, NEW YORK TEEN-AGER was stuck for an answer when police freed him from being wedged in a 24 by 36-inch hold in a window of a candy store.

"Unsympathetic" cops charged him with burglary.

In his possession was a crow bar and assorted burglar's tools.

A PRIVATE INVESTIGATOR sent a San Francisco couple two free tickets to a play with a note, saying: "I know you will enjoy this show, a friend . . ."

The couple showed up and sat next to the investigator, without knowing he was their benefactor.

At the final curtain, the investigator handed the man a subpoena and said, "It was an awfully nice experience meeting you folks . . . but I've been trying to serve you with this for two months, without luck."

HUNDREDS OF SOLDIERS from Fort Carson, Colorado Springs, are buying women's wigs at $20 each, simply to hide their close-cropped GI haircuts when they go off the Army post, according to local merchants.

Owners of three wig stores say the soldiers are trying to cover up the "whitewall" haircuts ordered by the Fort's commander.

"Most of the soldiers say they want a wig so local girls won't know they're GI's," said a local wig store manager.

AN ULTRAMODERN APARTMENT HOUSE in Warsaw, Poland, which was originally intended for workers on the Baltic Coast, has been turned over to prostitutes.

Reason: They were able to pay immediately with U.S. dollars.

The magazine Polityka said that this would also keep the girls off the streets.

THIS CAN BE YOUR "BIG BREAK" if you're a man who's ever said...

HERE'S TO YOUR HEALTH

By Richard Lawrence

DO YOU CONSIDER YOURSELF a lovable husband? If your answer is yes, then you do consider your wife a grownup, maintains Dr. Theodore Isaac Rubin, New York City M.D.

A truly lovable man, Dr. Rubin says, doesn't regard his wife as a financial idiot. He sees to it that she is well-educated in family finances, so that she'll be able to cope should anything happen to him.

Such a man has a keen appreciation of the enormity of his wife's job of running a house. He is well aware that there is no job more taxing than that of bringing up children.

A lovable man, he maintains, is genuinely interested in and involved with his wife and his children. He doesn't invest all of his time in work. He regards his family as full partners, friends as well as allies. He also shares his life's work, his happiness and his problems with them.

ASK A PASSIONATE WOMAN what she seeks and she will say, "Give me a man who is so strong he doesn't have to shout about it."

Such a passionate woman, according to Rush, Kansas marital psychiatrist, Dr. George McCready Worth, will say, "Give me a man who can be so sure of himself that he will trust me; one who is sexually strong enough that he uses his sexuality to bring me happiness rather than to feed his own ego. Give me one who looks on relations with a woman as a total commitment of two lives rather than a quick conquest; Give me a man whom I can keep happy enough so that he will not look for other women; Give me one who finds new and ever better ways of expressing his love—both physical and spiritual."

Are you this type of man? Here is a simple little test to determine your standing. Prepared by Dr. Worth, the test will specify whether you are totally committed, and if you are an effective individual who will be able to meet the needs of a passionate woman because you have created the passion within her:

1. When I meet a girl, am I interested in knowing the total woman instead of merely being concerned with bedding down with her?
2. Do you make lasting friendships based upon service to others?
3. And can you approach others without trying to take advantage of them?
4. Have you a genuine affection for children?
5. Do children recognize this affection and respond to it?
6. Have your sexual experiences been carried out in a climate of mutual reward rather than in a manner of carping, wheedling and demanding?
7. Are you able to be faithful to one woman regardless of the temptations which may be thrust upon you from other sources?
8. When you have to deny yourself sexual gratification, do you do it cheerfully and with tender understanding?
9. Have others told you that you're the solid type who can be relied upon when the going gets rough?
10. Are you ready to fight for your ideals rather than to swim along with the tide?

THE LONG-SOUGHT MEDICAL WEAPON to combat the age-old problems of female frigidity and male impotence may have been discovered.

A Georgetown University neurologist disclosed unexpected evidence that the experimental drug L-dopa can be a powerful sex stimulant in this battle.

The drug, according to neurologist Dr. William E. O'Malley, already has been hailed as a possible breakthrough against crippling Parkinson's disease. It also looks like "a true aphrodisiac," he said, "that could benefit hundreds of thousands of people throughout the world."

Although medical authorities warned that the drug is still highly experimental and carries with it severe side effects, it has demonstrated powers of giving some men in their 60's and 70's more sexual vigor than the average 20-year old man.

While predominantly affecting men, he said, the drug also has induced "hypersexuality, that is, a marked increase in sexuality," in some women.

THE REAL KEY TO BEING a big-time lover is common sense, states Boston marriage consultant, Dr. Richard Genovese.

Sex drive is a natural thing, he said, and you've got to consider it that way. Sex relations are a physical act, so you know you have to stay in good physical condition.

You know, he brought out, that women take longer to be stimulated sexually, so you do what you can to increase your wife's stimulation, while keeping a check on yourself.

Because there's another person involved in the sex act, you take into account her feelings, her personality. You want to be attractive to her, so you watch your appearance. You're not discouraged because you're short or skinny or don't have the face of a movie star. You know that a woman worth having cares for more than just looks.

So you learn to treat her as a person, relax, make her feel comfortable, keep after her in an ingratiating way—and before too long, as her husband, you'll be enjoying one of the best gifts Nature has given us, and you'll be enjoying the life of a big-time lover.

THE BEST WAY to alleviate the problem of premature orgasm is to seek professional help from a qualified psychiatrist.

However, according to Dr. H.H. Kornfeldt, Raleigh, North Carolina psychiatrist, the best way to alleviate this problem without resorting to professional counsel is threefold: 1. Completely relaxing before intercourse with your wife; 2. Masturbating, or, 3. Refraining from any kind of foreplay in marital relations.

Dr. Kornfeldt maintains that this problem is especially prevalent on a wedding night, not because a bride is physically a virgin and has never had intercourse before, but because her mental anguish and fright keep her rigid and tense.

HOW TED VERNON AVERAGES $20,000 WORKING 6 MONTHS A YEAR

NO COLLEGE! NO SELLING!
NO EXPERIENCE!

When Ted Vernon* walked to a mailbox that day in his small home town, the things he wanted seemed far beyond his reach. Like lots more money, freedom from his dead-end job, independence and security, a new future.

Chances looked dim. Ted had no college. His only experience was his old job. And he was already past 40.

Yet, when Ted Vernon mailed his envelope, everything he dreamed of suddenly became possible. It was the single most profitable act of his life. Yet all he did was mail a coupon like the one at the bottom of this page.

Free book put Ted on road to big income

The coupon brought Ted the same fascinating Free Book you can have in just a few days. It's an eye opener! It tells the story of a world of opportunity all around you in the booming Accident Investigation field.

It was all new to Ted. He'd hardly even heard of Accident Investigation. Yet Ted Vernon felt he had found his perfect opportunity.

And he had! Soon Ted was forging ahead fast in his new exciting career. His first full year he made $14,768.72. Since then he's averaging $20,000 working about six months a year. The rest of the time he relaxes and takes it easy.

He learned secrets of success in 30 minutes

Ted skimmed through Universal's Free Book in 30 minutes and changed his life. He learned many money-making facts! But the three big points that headed Ted to his success are:

- Accident Investigation is a $19 billion dollar industry booming to new heights every year. It's safe from layoff, recessions and automation—accidents continue no matter what.
- More men are urgently needed to investigate some 22 million accidents each year.
- For more than 20 years, Universal's training-by-mail has been the path to success for thousands of men in this high-pay field.

So there it was—the opportunity of a lifetime. Ted grabbed it—fast. He enrolled for Universal's by-mail training at the mere cost of cigarette money.

It was surprisingly easy. Ted simply studied his brief, interesting lessons at home in his spare time, at his own pace. He didn't risk a single paycheck because he kept right on with his old job until he could start making money quickly in Accident Investigation.

Ted Vernon's income is unusually high and not typical of the industry. He's a busy specialist in storm loss adjusting. But it does show the big potential in this great field even for men with no college and no experience. Read these reports from recent Universal students:

"My income has more than doubled."

—J. T. Woodruff of Louisiana.

"Thanks to you, I was contacted by 17 top companies."

—Donald Doris of Illinois.

"My income averages $1,200 to $2,000 a month."

—Ed Crouch of California.

"A raise every three months for the next two years, plus new car and expense account."

—Oscar Singletary of Georgia.

"My salary has increased by 63%."

—Marcel Roy, Canada.

TOPS IN ADVENTURE READING

"British And American Tanks of World War II," by Peter Chamberlain and Chris Ellis, Arco Publishing Company, (Illustrated) $9.95; When war broke out in 1939, both Great Britain and the United States had totally inadequate tank forces.

And they not only designed and developed these tanks, but manufactured them in very large numbers while at the same time constantly modifying them to meet changing tactical requirements.

Containing a concise history of each individual vehicle, the must reading for all war buffs reports in its entirety the fascinating story of Allied tank development.

Appendices listing armament, suspension systems, engines and comparative size, an index by function, and thorough cross-referencing, make vehicles easy to find and compare.

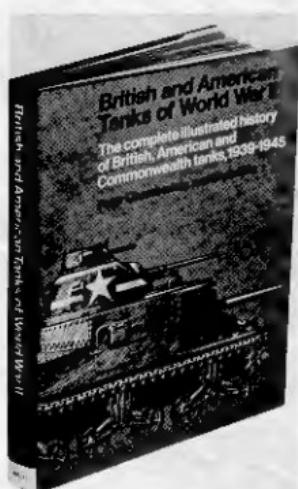

The authors are universally regarded as the foremost experts on armored vehicles.

"Humbugs and Heroes: A Gallery of California Pioneers", by Richard Dillon, Doubleday, $7.95; This book is an unusual portrait gallery that introduces sixty-three of the most interesting characters in California's history.

Mr. Dillon, who is head of the Sutro Library in San Francisco and acclaimed as one of the American West's outstanding young historians, has taken care to present these unique figures in all their human aspects, rather than as lifeless statuary, and has at the same time succeeded in separating truth from mere legend.

The lively, informative sketches in "Humbugs and Heroes" feature characters who are both famous and unknown, along with those whose reputations have become either greatly distorted or exaggerated.

There are portraits of John Sutter, the Swiss wanderer who was responsible for the biggest gold rush in America's history; John C. Fremont, the explorer; Ambrose Bierce, the mystery-writer who disappeared in Mexico around Impelled, however, by the demands of the deadly conflict, the English and the Americans very quickly developed the tank from a small, lightly armed vehicle—hardly bigger than the average automobile—to a complex forty-ton monster, powerfully armed, heavily armored, and, with the appropriate variants, capable of performing myriad tasks, from bridge-laying to troop carrying.

1914 and was never seen or heard from again; famous storytellers Mark Twain and Robert Louis Stevenson; and botanist Luther Burbank.

Also included are vignettes of such lesser-known figures as Theodore Dehone Judah, whose engineering genius led to the completion of the Central Pacific Railroad; Agoston Haraszthy, pioneer of the California wine industry; and the eccentric Joshua "Emperor" Norton.

Richard Dillon is often praised as having the liveliest style of any of the younger historians of the western United States, and his awards include the Order of Merit of the California Historical Society. He lives in Mill Valley, California.

"Medicine, Sangfroid And Wit," by John Robert Scott, M.D., Exposition Press, $3.50; In the autobiographical pages of his book, Dr. John Robert Scott takes the reader behind the silent curtain that many members of the medical profession have placed between their own fraternity and the public.

How do medical doctors view their profession? What do they privately think of their patients? Of their own particular roles in the art of healing? What qualities must a good physician have?

Dr. Scott's position is that the people have a right to know. Drawing on his experiences as a medical student, intern and practicing physician, he supplies often surprising answers with candor, humor and compassion. Without glossing over the human frailties of his fellow physicians—or his own—he retains a perspective of medical practice that is at once objective and idealistic.

"The practice of medicine," he writes, "is unique for its multitude of particular experiences and rewards. Its monetary returns, contrary to general opinion, lie at the bottom of a long list of compensations. One reward near the top of the list is entertainment."

Dealing with humans everyday results in amusing and hilarious incidents. The pathos of disease is often tempered by comedy. The doctor develops the ability to find sangfroid.

John Robert Scott was born in Canada and grew up in Montana. He received his A.B. from Bethel College, Newton, Kansas, and his M.D. from the University of Kansas. Dr. Scott has served as a captain in the Medical Corps of the U.S. Army and is now in private practice as a physician and surgeon in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Don Bolander says: "Now you can learn to speak and write like a college graduate."

Is Your English Holding You Back?

"Do you avoid the use of certain words even though you know perfectly well what they mean? Have you ever been embarrassed because you pronounced a word incorrectly? Are you sometimes unsure of yourself in a conversation with new acquaintances? Do you have difficulty writing a good letter or putting your true thoughts down on paper?

"If so, then you're a victim of crippled English," says Don Bolander, Director of Career Institute. "Crippled English is a handicap suffered by countless numbers of intelligent, adult men and women. Quite often they are held back in their jobs and their social lives because of their English. And yet, for one reason or another, it is impossible for these people to go back to school."

Is there any way, without going back to school, to overcome this handicap? Don Bolander says, "Yes!" With degrees from the University of Chicago and Northwestern University, Bolander is an authority on adult education. For almost twenty years he has helped thousands of men and women stop making mistakes in English, increase their vocabularies, improve their writing, and become interesting conversationalists right in their own homes.

BOLANDER TELLS HOW IT CAN BE DONE

During a recent interview, Bolander said, "You don't have to go back to school in order to speak and write like a college graduate. You can gain the ability quickly and easily in the privacy of your own home through the Career Institute Method." In his answers to the following questions, Bolander tells how it can be done.

Question: What is so important about a person's ability to speak and write?

Answer: People judge you by the way you speak and write. Poor English weakens your self-confidence—handicaps you in your dealings with other people. Good English is absolutely necessary for getting ahead in business and social life. You can't express your ideas fully or reveal your true personality without a sure command of good English.

Question: What do you mean by a "command of good English"?

Answer: A command of good English means you can express yourself clearly and easily without fear of embarrassment or making mistakes. It means you can write well, carry on a good conversation—also read rapidly and remember what you read. Good English can help you throw off self-doubts that may be holding you back.

Question: Are there other advantages to be gained by acquiring a command of good English?

Answer: Yes! Words are actually "tools of thought." The more you learn about words and how to use them to form and express your ideas, the better your thinking becomes. For this reason a command of good English often pays off in unexpected ways.

Question: Wouldn't I have to go back to school to gain a command of good English?

Answer: No, not anymore. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate right in your own home—in only a few minutes each day.

Question: Is this something new?

Answer: Career Institute of Chicago has been helping people for many years. The Career Institute Method quickly shows you how to stop making embarrassing mistakes, enlarge your vocabulary, develop your writing ability, discover the "secrets" of interesting conversation.

Question: How do I know it works?

Answer: There are thousands of letters in my files, testimonials from people in all walks of life who have used the proved Career Institute Method to achieve amazing results. If you send in the coupon below, I will share some of these letters with you.

Question: Who are some of these people?

Answer: The Career Institute Method is used by men and women of all ages. Some have attended college, others high school, and others only grade school. The method has helped business men and women, homemakers, industrial workers, clerks, secretaries . . . almost anyone you can think of.

Question: How long will it take me to learn to speak and write like a college graduate, using your method?

Answer: Some people take only a few weeks to gain a command of good English. Others take longer. It is up to you to set your own pace. In as little time as 15 minutes a day, you will see quick results.

Question: How can I find out more about the Career Institute Method?

Answer: I will gladly mail you a free 32-page booklet which explains the new easy-to-follow Career Institute Method and tells you how you can gain a command of good English quickly and enjoyably at home. Send coupon, card, or letter today to Career Institute, Dept. 281-93, 555 E. Lange St., Mundelein, Ill. 60060.

I LED CUBA'S WILD SISTERS OF SIN AND SLAUGHTER

By LES MOLLOY as told to MARK BRAND

In the night they came to me offering their bodies in return for a wild plan which meant violence and death.

ANGUILA Key — January 28, 1963. I ached all over from lying in one prone position on the hot sand. A relentless Caribbean sun broiled my back. The metal parts of the binoculars scorched my fingers and, what was worse, I had the uneasy feeling that I was being watched as I peered at the Chinese freighter lying at anchor a thousand yards from the dock. I glanced around quickly without raising my head. My fingers lingered on the .45 automatic jammed into my belt. The only sound to be heard was the purring of the twin-engine launch snuggling up to the dock with its precious cargo from the freighter. I listened for other sounds, like feet scraping sand, or a hushed voice. But I heard nothing.

It had to be my imagination working overtime. I was completely surrounded by dunes. No one could possibly see me here.

Warnings flashed through my mind. The dirty end of the stick, Molloy Hell, we don't have to spell it out for you. Just don't get caught.

Sure. The other committee agents drew Florida, Georgia or Mexico. I got Anguilla Key, a sandpile in the center of the Caribbean. No local police to call on for help, no partner to back me up, not even an assist from the Senate investigating committee conducting this probe.

The launch's power was cut. Silence descended like a smothering blanket. A lone sea gull set up a complaining wail. I felt my apprehension mounting. Fear became something I could taste, along with the salty sweat that ran into my mouth.

Suddenly, figures loomed up over the dunes. They rose as a unit, all at once, as though timed. Armed Cubans. Filthy, bedraggled, looking more like the dregs of Pancho Villa's forces. Sun-darkened faces were made even blacker by the growths of beards. They stared down at me as though I was vermin.

"Hoy, gringo! Stand up!" The speaker cradled a rifle in his arms. He shuffled to me, wiping sweat from his eyes with his sleeve. He snapped the binoculars out of my hands and peered through them. "You see much?" He sneered. "Maybe too much, eh?" His hand moved over me and came to rest on the .45.

Mirka used a cheap trick to get me to do what she wanted. It failed. But when I held her close I knew I'd weaken.

He yanked it out, examined it and then tossed it to another Cuban. "We will have sport with the gringo, no?"

A cheer went up. I saw their contempt for me on their sneering faces. My heart hammered against my rib cage. The sweat that drained from me now seemed cold.

The circle was closed. They were close enough for me to smell their stinking bodies. They laughed at me. Someone growled, "Walk, gringo!"

At the same moment I was shoved hard. I whirled in a sudden burst of anger and cracked the nearest chin. The Cuban sagged, but then a rifle butt slammed into my neck. Bright sunlight became a deep purple haze. I felt myself falling. Pain ignited in my head and swept down my spine. I was lifted and dragged. Through blurred vision I saw that we were headed toward a large wooden structure I recognized it as the place where their cargo was being stored.

A fat Cuban stood at the threshold. He held what looked like a hand machine gun. Faces appeared behind him. Curious faces. Clean. They could have been women. They crowded the door, but as we neared he shoved them roughly aside to make room.

I was dropped to the floor. My captors hurried to a water cask. I shook my head to clear it and noticed the fat Cuban staring down at me. His machine gun was trained at my head. "What is this, Lastran?" "Sport for us."

The fat one grinned like a moron and I heard feminine gasps behind me. A peal of harsh laughter exploded. With sweat dripping from his loose jowls, the fat one chuckled at the women, "You have no stomach for blood?"

THERE was no answer. The men had broken open bottles of rum and were lifting them to their mouths. They sat down on chairs or on the floor. Some leaned against the stacks of bags that had come off the freighter. Their gazes wandered to the women. Lustful grins split their faces. Two of the men got up and went to the women.

I heard scuffling behind me. Cries of, "No, no!" were drowned under more raucous laughter and the women were pushed into my range of vision.

There were five of them. They wore only scraps of clothing. Their bodies were bruised and lacerated. Now they were being dragged to the floor. Dirty hands swept over their quivering flesh. They struggled to get away from the slobbering men, but were powerless. Two of the women were screaming. Another's mouth was held open and rum poured into it. She gagged on the strong liquor and fought desperately to free herself.

Outrage enflamed me, but I couldn't allow myself to be concerned. I turned away. The fat slob next to me watched the disgusting sight with drool on his thick lips. The gun was slack. He wasn't paying any attention to me at all.

It was an opportunity I couldn't afford to let pass. I lifted my knee quickly and caught him squarely under the chin. I bolted to a sitting position and wrenched the machine gun out of his hands. He thudded to the floor. I was on my feet now, facing the men who were at last realizing what had happened.

The women were pushed out of the way. The Cuban named Lastran stood up. His eyes were wide. "You are foolish, gringo. Your boat is not as fast as our launch." He stepped forward slowly, his hands spread placatingly. "We will sink you."

The argument about how I should die was stalemated until the spurned sister suggested a method that made me consider suicide.

I squeezed off a short burst that sent a spray of bullets into the bags just above his head. Poppy seeds drained out. That was another reason I had to get back to the mainland. The Senate subcommittee had to know about this place.

Lastran froze now. The others were smart enough not to make a move toward their weapons. One of the women slipped away from the man who'd mauled her and approached me from the side. She stopped a couple of feet away. "Amigo, take us with you?"

"No." I backed up to the door, then ordered the Cubans to toss their rifles at my feet. The woman stood her ground even as the weapons clattered to the floor. I picked up the hardware one piece at a time and flipped it up to the tin roof above us. The woman moved closer. "Please . . ."

I gave her the same answer. She choked back a sob, turned around and walked away. Out of the corner of my eye I could see her shoulders heaving. It wasn't an easy decision to make, but it was the only one. I couldn't risk it. I wasn't responsible for the kind of jam they were in. And I couldn't take a chance on one or more of them doing something dumb to queer my escape. Besides, the information I had now was too important. Washington had to know about it.

I held the machine gun at gut level and walked backwards into the sunlight. My skiff was beached a good five hundred yards away, but I could keep the door covered for at least one hundred yards. By the time they recovered their rifles I'd be well on my way to Key West.

I backed up into a knife. Its cutting edge rested against my jugular vein. A steady hand held it so that the slightest move on my part would mean my death.

"You will drop the gun." The voice was clipped, high-pitched. The accent was Chinese. I hesitated. The pressure of the blade on my throat increased. I let go of the gun.

A figure in black snatched it quickly. The knife was withdrawn. Both men were slight of build and sombre. They spoke to each other in Chinese, then ordered me back into the building.

The Cubans flooded through the door. Lastran charged forward and swung a right at my jaw. I ducked. Another Cuban grabbed me from behind and held my arms. Lastran's next punch didn't miss. Nor the next and the one after that. My mouth was filled with the salty taste of blood. I spat it out and stained the sand. Lastran got ready to swing again, but one of the men from the ship stopped him. "You waste your energy. Kill him."

"No," the Cuban breathed. "He will suffer first." The Chinese shook his head. "You are not wise." "I will decide that." Lastran grabbed my shirt and jerked me to him. His foul breath sickened me. "Soon you will plead for death, gringo. You will crawl on your belly and beg me to kill you."

I spat a mouthful of blood in his face. I regretted the action a second.

TEN SURE WAYS TO BECOME A BIG TIME LOVER

By BOB SHERWIN

Don't be too quick to blame her if she shuns your advances. She may have any one of ten good reasons for doing so.

Instinct isn't enough. If you're seeking something extra-special out of life, an expert tells you how to light the fires that count.

DON'T YOU wish you fared better at love? Every man, single or married, bold or shy, wants to improve, and there's no reason why you can't.

Big-time lovers aren't born that way. They learn their skill, the way any artist learns his—by mastering the fundamentals, paying attention to the rules, experimenting and practicing.

No matter how many times you've struck out, as fiance or husband, you can still join the list of men who merit the title, big-time lover. Just master the following 10 points, and you'll be on your way:

1. CONDITION—No one in his right mind would go out on a football field to collide with a professional team unless he were in tip-top physical condition, yet many a young man tackles love-making on too little sleep or too much wine.

There are exceptions, but most of us can't be masters of the bedroom unless our over-all physical condition is good. Successful love-making requires a good deal of staying power, and the fellow who's in a weakened condition to begin with will fade in the stretch—if he makes it that far.

I had a friend who drank a lot to give himself the courage to proposition a girl he had met at a party. It worked wonders; he was completely at ease, talked freely, made points. But when she was willing he wasn't able—because he'd had so much to drink he could hardly stay awake.

Excessive drinking, or even eating, or narcotics, will leave the opposite effect of what you intended. The artificial stimulants may heighten desire, but usually they cut your ability.

If you haven't been staying in shape by getting enough rest and exercise, start right now.

And remember, too much love-making is self-defeating. It tires you to the point that the act becomes mechanical and matter-of-fact instead of the exciting, uplifting experience it should be. So go easy, and stay in shape.

THE INCREDIBLE SORORITY OF WOMEN WHO WANT TO DIE

By J. R. WAYNE

The scream that pierces the night. The sound of ripping clothing. The thudding of heavy fists into soft flesh. These are the signs of a "senseless" sex murder. But is it the way it actually happened?

THE facts are in. Judges, psychiatrists and law enforcement agencies are in accord on a point of female behavior which has only recently been thoroughly studied.

For the first time in the history of Man, attention is being focused not only on the criminal, but on the sometimes senseless actions of his supposedly innocent victim.

We are learning that women who have been brutally raped may have unconsciously asked for it.

We are learning that in many cases a woman—unconsciously or not—has actually aided the rapist-killer in his heinous crime.

And that there are some, because of masochistic tendencies, who openly invite the pain, humiliation and violence of a sex attack.

Of course it's difficult to believe. What sane woman would deliberately or even unconsciously ask for something so terrifying as rape? A few years back experts were of the same opinion. Then along came a psychologist named Hans von Hentig who tossed a shocking phrase into the laps of his contemporaries which had them altering their views considerably.

Von Hentig called it "the crime-provocative function of the victim." His remark was directed particularly to the sex offender, implying that in many instances the crime of rape might not have occurred at all if he received no provocation from his victim.

Take, for example, the case of the 45-year-old librarian who was found almost unconscious in a suburban park near her home. She'd been brutally beaten and had been attacked.

She told police she'd walked toward home after leaving the library at ten o'clock. A man came out of the park and said, "Looking for someone?"

She said, "No, go away."

He took a step forward and she ran into the park. He followed, caught her and smashed her about the face with his fists. He then dragged her into the bushes.

On the surface, the story sounds shocking. If you'd been at the hospital with the police to hear the woman sob, "I thought he was going to kill me. And I almost wish he had!" you'd have felt only contempt for the rapist and profound sympathy for the woman.

But instead of accepting the situation as it is, let's examine the story more closely.

In the first place, why had she decided to walk home when she usually took a bus? She had also been aware that another rape had taken place a month earlier in the same park. Why hadn't that knowledge deterred her from even thinking of walking?

Our courts are at last placing some of the blame for the staggering rise in crimes of rape right where it belongs.

SOULMATES OF AGONY FOR FRANCE'S MONSTER KING

By CHUCK McCARTHY

Death made a diabolical bargain with the bloody tyrant and the walls echoed a maiden's agony.

DEATH strode arrogantly into the royal bed chamber. He sniffed the odor of pus which permeated the very walls of the Castle of Plessis. And he smiled.

Death studied the gross, bloated body of the royal occupant of the bed chamber. He saw the greenish face, the disfigured limbs, the wildly matted hair. He concentrated on the eyes which tried to mask their fear at his presence. Death knew that the moment had not yet come to claim Louis XI.

But Death did not feel cheated. His all-encompassing glance swung to the girl who lay shuddering at the king's feet. He touched her soft shoulder. Shivering convulsively she regarded his gaunt visage.

Even before Louis raised his phlegm crackling voice to summon the guards, the girl seemed to know. She clutched her wrists, still raw and red from the merciless chafing of the irons which had encased them. She stared at her bare feet knowing that in a matter of seconds they would be hobbled once more by the fearful fetters.

I MADE THE THE ROUND - THE -

We lived on kief and traded our self-respect for a handful of dirhams. But all of it exploded for me with my girl lying naked and screaming for help.

By Bill Murphy

WE WERE high on kief and the night chill of Katmandu swept into the bare room and brought Claudia's naked body closer to mine for warmth. Her breath was sweet, comforting. Like the aroma of hashish in a smoky Tibetan restaurant. My fingers found the small of her back and urged her still closer. Her eyes janned, slightly glazed. Her mouth was soft and open against mine. I don't know what kind of fantasy she enjoyed, but I was in it, a part of it. Then her arms were around my neck and we were rolling on the bare floor, her hips working, her nails clawing into my flesh in the awful, wonderful, terrible urgency of what we were doing.

Bliss smoke from our Nepalese pipes still hovered above us when we were finished. I moved to Claudia's side. My arm was draped across her belly. The fantasies had slipped away and she was clear-eyed again. My own headiness was gone. I held up one of the pipes. "Want to light up again?"

She shook her head. A tear formed in the corner of her eye. I flicked it off with my thumb. "What's the matter—homesick?"

"Yes."

"Where's home?"

"Dijon."

The door burst open and the gang poured in. "Merry Christmas, you two."

"Get the hell out!" I scowled.

"Don't mind us. Go on with what you were doing," Herman said, pulling at his red beard and peering at Claudia's naked body. Herman was from the Netherlands, but he wasn't the type to stick his finger in a dyke to hold back the floodwaters. He'd rather watch the city drown, just for kicks.

Claudia pulled something in front of her and snapped at Herman, "You are a pig, n'isi-ce pas?"

The Dutchman laughed. He sat down with the others and dumped some rupees on the floor between his legs. "Ten, that's all I got from the cheap squares."

Jerry tossed a handful of rupees on top of Herman's small pile. "You ain't holding out, are you?"

"Search me," Herman challenged.

"I wouldn't touch you with a ten-foot pole."

"You ain't much cleaner."

Jerry was a Yank. Like me. Back in Ohio his old man raised a fuss about Jerry's long hair. He called his Dad a cube and a few more choice names and was promptly kicked out and cut off. Now Jerry's one of us. A nomad.

THE SCENE WITH WORLD BEATNIKS

SGT. BROTSKY'S INCREDIBLE JOY GIRL PASSION AMBUSH

All Brotsky's squad had to do now was to love its way through the Viet Cong's lust-triggered booby trap.

by Dean W. Bollenger

AN INFORMER in the Viet Cong's Procurement for Victors department in Hanoi sent word that the VCs were going to haul a convoy of Four Deuces to their field troops in the Khok Plateau.

U.S. brass got the message. The Four Deuce, a Russian-made 4.2 inch mortar with the same zap as a 150mm shell, is a murderous weapon which can fire HEs, APs or incendiaries. With these heavies the VCs would be able to lob U.S. installations from remote jungle glades. It didn't take much imagination to conjure up a vision of what the aftermath on a U.S. base would look like after a quick-and-sudden shelling from a half dozen Four Deuces. Or what a crowded mess hall would be like after such an attack. Or a barracks area.

An hour after the brass came out of their panic huddle Sgt. Ralph Brotakay and his men were ordered to immobilize the Four Deuce convoy them-radio HQ at Yu'Chang so bombers could be dispatched to destroy it.

Brotakay and the three groundpounders who comprised his squad—Cpl. Glen Lochner and Pts. Nick Criswell and Tom Shadrick—were the most-scoring S&K (Search and Kill) team in the U.S. Special Forces. They climbed into two Hueys (HUIB) helicopters at Yu'Chang and soon these choppers and two Huey gunships darted into a jungle clearing on the Khok Plateau, hovered for 10 seconds then zoomed to another clearing. These were feints. On the third dip the S&Ks leaped out.

The Hueys made another phony landing then whirled away. Meanwhile the S&Ks sprinted into the jungle and dived under a frangl bush. "They threw us a load this time," Brotakay muttered, looking around.

Putting the zap on the

The GIs led the Vietnamese hammers out of the burning truck. Brotakay knew he had saved the girls from a fate worse than death, so it was only right that they show his squad their appreciation.

"Hey, Buddy, this is it," they whisper as they point to a little brown bottle. Buy it and you are being taken for more than a sucker.

In fact, so dangerous is the golden-green substance (cantharides) that people in Spain, Italy and Southern France protect their faces with masks and their hands with gloves when collecting the insect with the mouse-like smell.

It used to be that cantharides would be employed in the same way as a mustard plaster. But experts found the drug was easily absorbed through the skin, and ordered that it not be applied to any part of the body on which the patient was likely to lie because heat and perspiration would result in painful, dangerous blistering.

Children, the aged, and weak persons of any age should not even use cantharides outside their bodies, so you can imagine the risk involved in swallowing even a speck of Spanish fly.

Medical authorities insist that if cantharides is to be used externally at all, utmost precautions should be taken to prevent it from entering the eyes, mouth or other sensitive areas.

Especially harmful to the kidneys, cantharides can do untold damage when taken internally.

THE TRUTH ABOUT

By William Bishop

FROM the very beginnings of time, men have sought ways to weave magic spells around the women of their choice. Fortunes have been spent with alchemists for magic elixirs which would make a fair maiden swoon at the approach of her would-be lover.

There have been wild stories circulated about the results obtained from various magic potions. Some ardent suitors even went to their deaths for their traffic in Black Magic. Still the search goes on.

If there are any chemicals which can change the outlook of a reluctant woman, they have yet to be discovered. The truth is that all of the stories you may hear concerning today's drugs are so much bunk.

Most of the aphrodisiacs or passion drugs you hear about or see advertised are about as effective sexually as a glass of water. The few that do have the ability to stimulate are dangerous and sometimes fatal.

The best known of the passion drugs is Spanish fly—a bitter-tasting powder made from an insect known scientifically as Cantharis Vasicatoria. Twenty-four grains of this powder can kill you!

Here's how one U.S. Public Health official described the effects on a female patient who had swallowed some of the "passion drug":

"She had excruciating pain in her digestive tract, stomach, kidneys and bladder. . . . She vomited constantly and had a persistent desire to urinate. . . . Her pulse became weaker and weaker, until she finally collapsed."

Ironically, there is little evidence to support the reputation that Spanish fly is acquired as a sex-stimulant.

How have "love potions" managed to remain popular?

Well, many people haven't changed much from primitive days when people were extremely superstitious and would believe a concoction possessed any of the properties claimed for it by a witch-doctor or person of comparable stature. If the witch-doctor said a particular herb made a man more virile or potent, or a woman more receptive to love-making, they wouldn't dare doubt it. Often, believing that some brew would put them more "in the mood," they'd actually feel more in the mood.

As you well know, even today much of what is sexually exciting is, in a sense, "in the mind." The naive girl who's convinced that she's just had some passion-food may have herself believing it and acting more passionately.

"It should be remembered," says the Encyclopaedia Britannica, "that a large part of the plants, vegetables, spices, etc., which are supposed to be aphrodisiacs acquired their reputation many centuries ago when there was no scientific information available."

In early times, people used to think that if a plant or vegetable resembled genitalia, it was reasonable to believe the plant possessed sexual characteristics and powers. Vanilla, for instance, originally meant vagina (pod or sheath).

Oysters supposedly have great aphrodisiacal powers, but some authorities believe this feeling is based on the fact that they look and feel like certain parts of the female anatomy.

Except for fish with a high concentration of phosphorus, and possibly asparagus, none of the various foods to which sex-stimulant powers are attributed has the chemical agents that could physiologically affect the genito-urinary tract.

which Heartman attributes unusual sexual powers. He even recounts the story of two holy men locked up with two young women of exquisite beauty. At first they failed to achieve the aim of the Sultan in locking them up. After several weeks (of a fleshy fish diet), "they were subjected anew to the combined powers of youth and beauty; this time, however, nature was stronger than they, and they . . . succumbed astonishingly."

Despite Heartman's enthusiasm for the sexual powers of fish, mushrooms, peppermint, etc., he makes this point very strongly:

"The use of other aphrodisiacs, such as ambergris, civet, musk cantharides (Spanish fly) and phosphorous, is dangerous; it may even be deadly."

And Ambroise Pare cites the case of a man who died of priapism and hemorrhage of the urethra, due to a potion of cantharides a courtesan had him take.

In the 19th century, Paris restaurants featured luxurious private dining room-boudoir suite combinations known as cabinets particuliers.

Truffles enjoyed a far-reaching reputation as an aphrodisiac. Brillat-Savarin, a Frenchman, once wrote: "Whoever says truffles pronounces a great word, sure to awaken sentimental and succulent memories among the sex in petticoats, and succulent and passionate memories among the sex sporting a mustache."

"That distinguished duplication," he said, comes not only because of the delicious taste of truffles but "because it is believed that it increases a power whose exercise is accompanied by the sweetest of pleasures."

"The truffle can, on certain occasions, render women more tender and men more amiable."

A great believer in the powers of certain foods as aphrodisiacs was C. F. Heartman, who claimed that the "lascivious orgies" of Antony and Cleopatra were helped immeasurably by cookery.

And, according to Heartman, plover eggs helped Madame duBarry, who "through her knowledge of the pleasures of love, kept her royal lover plunged into a state of intoxication of the senses bordering on depravity."

THE moment she opened the door I knew she had ideas. You could spot it in the way her little red tongue played over her pouting lips. It was written in the widelegged stance. She wore a shapeless shift which tightened across the swell of her hips and breasts. She was a woman who radiated extreme self-confidence and a lot more.

Installment Plan

I hadn't said a word to her yet. But there were a lot of things I did know about her. She was well to do—the car parked in her garage was a small Bentley. She had no false modesty—the lingerie fluttering from the outside clothes line indicated that she had no desire to hide her natural attributes. She was bored and petulant—the look of the neglected and long suffering wife had been etched into her features.

I showed her my credentials and immediately launched my sales spiel. The item I handled was good for the more affluent suburbs. (It was a set of encyclopedias.)

She heard my words, but she wasn't really listening. Her mind obviously raced to other things. "Won't you come into the living room?" (Continued on page 39)

ONE TIME LOVER

2. CONTROL—Even for men who are in good physical shape, lack of control is a serious problem in making love successfully.

Biologically and psychologically, males are geared for quick orgasm, but this tendency has to be controlled if their wives are going to find gratification and, in turn, please them. Many a marriage has gone on the rocks because the husband's repeated premature orgasm left the wife frustrated and created tension between them.

There are several ways to meet the problem. First, because the mind plays such a significant role, it isn't far-fetched to practice concentrating on subjects removed from sex during what sex play.

Then, you can, and should, spend more time on preliminaries such as caressing and kissing, so that your partner's rate of stimulation approaches yours.

Mainly, though. It's a matter of will power. You've got to want badly enough to give your partner satisfaction so that you learn to hold back. A neighbor of mine did, and even though he's not much to look at and doesn't earn much money, his pretty young wife thinks he's the greatest guy in the world.

3. APPEARANCE—Far from what people generally believe, the big, rugged athletes aren't necessarily the big-time losers. And it takes more than a handsome face to be a winner.

But don't sell appearance short. Women aren't as concerned about looks in their sex partners, as men are about theirs, but the female of the species isn't going to take the time to learn about all your other good qualities if your appearance doesn't.

So make the most of what you have. Even if you have the face of a pug, you can keep your hair combed and your teeth brushed, and still look presentable. And you don't have to wear expensive clothes to dress neatly.

"If a man dresses sloppily, I figure he's sloppy about everything," a worldly young sex goddess told me, in explaining why she wouldn't give a mutual acquaintance of ours a tumble.

Some women like their men to be Tarans in private, but when they're first getting acquainted, and especially one in public, they like their Tarans to look civilised. Keep it in mind.

CONVERSATION — It's hard to believe, but very few men really know how to talk to a woman. Some depend on sweet-talk and others go through the motions of a conversation, but most men are either too embarrassed or too eager to be able to talk naturally to a woman.

If you're in this category, start practicing. This doesn't mean developing a line, and the reason is very practical. Most women can spot a line before a guy opens his mouth, and she'll think him as a phony before they get acquainted. Instead, practice becoming a conversationalist. You don't have to be an "egghead" to become one. All it means is being alert to topics that interest the woman you're interested in. Then, talk to her about them. Ask her what she thinks about the subject; give your opinion. Don't be afraid to disagree politely, just as you would with a male friend. The point, essentially, is to treat her as a human being who is interesting, and she's likely to find you that way too.

As to getting to "The Point" in your conversation, it's wise to remember that sometimes the most indirect approach has the most direct, positive result.

It will vary from one individual to the next, but the guy who launches into bedroom talk from the opening gun is likely to be discounted as a juvenile, who will never make it to the bedroom.

WATCH OUT FOR THE OTHER GUY

5. SENSE OF HUMOR—I once asked a popular, well-built girl what had attracted her to her boy friend. "His sense of humor," she answered, without hesitation.

She's not alone in appreciating this quality in a man. A sense of humor sometimes seems to be an inborn trait, but it can be developed.

Learn to laugh at some of the laughable things in life—including yourself—and you're likely to brighten up things for the object of your affections.

Don't confuse a sense of humor with telling dirty jokes for shock effect. This usually ends up with the girl rating you as just another guy with an evil mind. A sense of humor is more subtle and broad. And if you can take a light approach with sex, your chances of succeeding at it are that much improved.

6. CONDITIONS—Time, place and atmosphere all have to be right.

If your mate can't concentrate on what's uppermost in your mind until, say, the dishes are done, wait until they are. Sure, you can force the issue, but unless she's been faking, she's going to be uncomfortable and your interlude probably will be pretty unsatisfying. Better to wait until she's in the mood.

Even more important, though, is the general atmosphere. Everything—the quarters, the lighting, perhaps music and especially you—should contribute to making her comfortable. It isn't difficult to attain, and well worth planning and working for.

7. GUILT—Tell the truth. Do you think of sex as kind of dirty? Making love something evil? If you do, that may be what's keeping you from being good at love-making.

A fellow I once knew was crazy about a girl, courted her and married her. They idolized each other so, you'd think their love-making would be magnificent. But it wasn't that at all.

My friend—let's call him Larry—had grown up thinking everything connected with sex was dirty. He'd had his share of sexual escapades with loose women and, deep down, he felt that sex belonged only to women like that. As far as having relations with a girl he cared for, Larry subconsciously was shocked at the idea.

When it came to his honeymoon,

Larry had to face his responsibilities, but his guilt feelings about sex with a "nice" girl—his wife—took him emotionally. He made up excuses about being tired or sick, and the few times he did (at her insistence) have relations, he was quick and abrupt. It got so bad, they had to consult a marriage counselor for help.

What makes guilt feelings about sex so hard to overcome is that often we're not aware we have these feelings. Be alert to the symptoms. If you're not enjoying relations with your wife, or if you're always getting headaches when you should be making love, it could be a sign that sex is a dirty word to you.

8. RELAXATION—"If only he wouldn't try so hard," a wife once told her doctor. "He ought to learn to relax."

You've probably known men like the one she mentioned. They're so taken with the girl, or with the idea of conquest, they can't talk or think straight about anything but. Sometimes the palms sweat, or they look for chances to brush against the girl, or sneak a touch. This kind of behavior usually ruins their chances before they start.

No girl wants to be considered an easy mark. Furthermore, wives while they enjoy sex, don't have it uppermost in the mind the way most men do. They like to talk while, get in a mood, and relax before they'll yield.

9. CAMPAIGN—When a politician wants public office, he campaigns—and so should you, for what you want.

Some girls like to play hard-to-get, so don't be discouraged by early rebuffs.

Find out what she likes and act accordingly.

This is so fundamental, it shouldn't have to be mentioned. But too many men go by what they'd like to do rather than what the girl's interests are.

I once lost a girl to a guy who brought her a book of poems. I had been so anxious to make love with her, I had never taken the time to find out she could read.

10. COMMON SENSE—The real key to being a big-time lover is common sense. Sex drive is a natural thing and you've got to consider it that way. Sex relations are a physical act, so you know you have to stay in good physical condition. There's an emotional aspect to it, so you make sure that you avoid anything that upsets your wife emotionally.

You know that women take longer to be stimulated sexually, so you do what you can to increase your wife's stimulation, while keeping a check on yourself. Because there's another person involved in the sex act, you take into account her feelings, her personality. You want to be attractive to her, so you watch your appearance. You're not discouraged because you're short or skinny or don't have the face of a movie star. You know that a woman worth having cares for more than just looks.

So you learn to treat her as a person, relax, make her feel comfortable, keep after her in an ingratiating way—and before too long, as her husband you'll be enjoying one of the best gifts Nature has given us, and you'll be enjoying the life of a big-time lover.

LUST ON THE INSTALLMENT PLAN

she purred. The way she said it, I knew that my line might not be reaching her. But I was.

The living room told me a lot more about her. It reflected strictly feminine taste. No ship models, no bookcases, no over-sized easy chairs where a man could take his comfort. My hostess was a dominant woman used to having her own way. It seemed apparent that she despised her husband for allowing her these liberties.

Once seated, I concentrated on my most salient selling points. I stressed the importance of giving youngsters the proper tools to enhance their education. I quoted statistics which prove the earning power of the college graduate over the holder of a high school diploma. I cited the pennies per month cost.

I knew I was on firm ground. Talk to women about their children's education and you have them eating out of your hand. That's the trick about in-the-home selling. You have to have an item that's a status symbol. Your prospects must see it as enriching their lives or those of their youngsters. You have to screen your customers before you call on them.

For example, I never walk in cold. I buy telephone lists and canvas first. ■ ■ prospect agrees to see me, I'm better than 50 per cent sure of a sale. It's always a natural to get the husland and wife together. If one has any sales resistance, you can pit the other against the hard buyer.

These are all little tricks of the trade. My current call was typical of more and more I'm seeing these days. When I had suggested that I come by in the evening so that we could discuss my encyclopedias with her husband, her voice had dripped acid.

"That won't be necessary," she'd commented. "My husband travels a great deal. I make most of the decisions concerning the children."

If the message sounds crisp and impersonal to you, it didn't to me. I'd heard it too often before.

NOW as she sat opposite me, I knew that I had been right about Mrs. James Scot. Her legs were deviously crossed and the shift she wore parted high above her knee. Her hands rested lightly on the arms of her chair. Her head was tilted slightly backward against the cushion so that she regarded me through half closed lashes. Nothing I had said concerning the benefits of my books could have caused the agitated heaving of her still firm breasts.

I jumped from a commentary of space age physics to the chapters dealing with medieval history. A smile began at the corners of her mouth. It developed into a broad grin. She moved like a big lazy cat. A second later she was standing with her hand on my shoulder, glancing down at the volume which rested across my knees.

"You don't know how starved I've been for intellectual conversation," she said. "It's such a relief from the crabgrass talk you hear around here all the time. You know sometimes I'm sorry I spent so much time in schools. There's nobody to talk to here. Nobody to stimulate you."

She bent over me to flip a page. Her pointed breast mashed against my shoulder. She made a pretense of stumbling slightly. The encyclopedia fell to the floor. Mrs. James Scot—Alice Brown Scot—landed lightly in my lap. Her arms snaked around my neck and her sweet breath bathed my face. She pressed against me. There was an unmistakable challenge in her eyes.

My hand moved up the smoothness of her bare leg. For a moment her body tensed. She drew slightly away from me.

"This is ridiculous," she said. But she made no move to really disengage herself.

I toyed with the catch of her shift. She sighed almost insaudibly. The garment fell away from her creamy body. The bra and panties she wore were no covering at all. She snuggled closer to me. Her lips found mine.

"The kids don't get home from school until three," she said. I smiled. Then she giggled impudently. "We'd be more comfortable in the bedroom. I just close sheets on, just in case."

Mrs. James Scot—Alice Brown Scot—had fires of passion within her which had been smothered under a dupper for a long long time. They flamed up to consume us. She was quite a batch of vibrant suburban womanhood.

Nor was Alice Brown Scot's approach to the causal in-the-home seller as unusual as you may think. Such morning and afternoon episodes have happened to me more frequently than you would imagine.

A good many other men in my trade have been exposed to the suburban sex mania. From the accounts you hear at a selling convention, no community is completely free of it.

There are some good and sound reasons for such occurrences. Some of it has to do with us. A good portion is symptomatic of the frustrations which are plaguing women today.

Let's look at the good salesman first and see how he arouses the susceptibility of his distract customer.

In-the-home selling is an art. Most sales managers demand that their canvassers have a good appearance. Not greasy handsome, mind you, but with an open honest face and eyes that radiate sincerity.

We are schooled in psychology. As a matter of fact our entire indoctrination period is spent in familiarizing ourselves with the way our message is received. We are well aware that we are privileged guests within a home and do our damndest to act like friends of the family. And who is better at cuckolding an inattentive husband than a friend of the family?

Self-confidence is a must too. This sense of assurance is interpreted by many women as masculinity. Once they have annihilated their own husbands, they are prone to try to restore manhood in their lives. It's strange but true. A woman marries a man, diminishes him, despises him and then looks for somebody who impresses her with his manly being.

The salesman who carries an item such as mine must be well spoken. You can't be a doe down and done character and talk the benefits of educational aids.

A PPEARANCE had started her human percolating. An in-the-home representative must be all spit and polish. If he looks like a tramp, he won't get past the front door.

The casual salesman offers another ingredient. That is safety. The wife with an itch can abandon her celibacy for a moment with him without fear.

She knows there is little chance that she will ever meet him again. She knows that he has no reason to kiss and tell in her neighborhood. She knows that without a protracted affair, she can ease the passions within her without becoming romantically involved.

And perhaps my greatest asset is that I am on the scene. Business and travel are one and the same thing today. Many men spend a portion of almost every week on the road. Family structure as it was once known is dead. I'm willing to bet that 75 per cent of suburban men are absented husbands.

For their part, the Alice Brown Scots are caught up in a sexual revolution which they don't understand completely. They long more for excitement than for love. Despite their cool style, they are infernos of doubt about their womanhood. I'd say that just about ninety per cent of them are neurotic in one form or another.

Recently I read that 75 per cent of the narcotics addiction in Westchester County, New York represented housewives. Add the figure of over 50 per cent of American women being frigid (statistic we don't feature in our encyclopedias) and you begin to realize that when a strange man walks through the storm door anything can happen.

The women who have led me to their elicit couches have all been of the same pattern. They have above average intelligence (most have at least attended college and a good percentage have graduated.) They have been pampered and spoiled by modern gadgetry which leaves them too much time to think about themselves. They are insecure because they do not have strong husbands to lean on. They are upset by the fierce competition which marks the suburban social scene.

To escape what they are, they swallow tranquillizers and build their erotic dreams. Then I come along offering them a moment's fulfillment.

Their attitudes are best reflected by Alice Brown Scot's. I can see her standing naked in her own bedroom after her passion had been sated. She looked at me with those half-serious, half-smoking eyes.

"Have stock. I would have considered me a case history," she laughed. "I wonder what he'd call me. A slut? A nymphomaniac? I don't know I might be both. Yet with you I feel like a complete woman for the first time in months," she smiled and added, "Give me the damned contract for the encyclopedia. Then get the hell out of here. My kids will be coming home in half an hour." EMD

TOM McCAHILL SAYS:

"The appliance repair field is so uncrowded
it's almost lonely!"

Someone once said that if you build a better mousetrap, the world will beat a path to your door. In the home appliance business, a lot of enterprising companies have gotten rich peddling a long list of handy electrical gadgets for the home. The trouble is, the dozen or more appliances in the average American home can go on the fritz, and men with the proper training to do repairs are as scarce as knee-length skirts on teen-agers.

Good Appliance Repairmen are a rare breed these days. Those with a little ambition are booked so solidly you can wait days to get somebody to fix a balky refrigerator or cantankerous toaster. Sometimes, you have to settle for a bum job from a guy who had no business calling himself an Appliance Repairman in the first place.

This brings me to my point. If you want to make money in a field that's begging for trained technicians, there's a fine, low-cost home-study plan available that teaches you how to handle every type of Appliance repair in detail — including refrigeration, air conditioners, and even small gas engines. The course was prepared by the instructors at National Radio Institute. This is the oldest and largest home-study school in the Electronics/Electrical fields with more than fifty years' experience training men like yourself for new careers or spare-time or full-time businesses of their own.

A few years ago, NRI recognized the increasing demand for trained Appliance Repairmen. They set about preparing well-illustrated, easy-to-understand lessons that teach you how to repair home, commercial and farm Appliances. NRI even added a professional Appliance Tester that's included in their low tuition. With the Tester and a few basic tools you probably already have, you're equipped to service most Electrical Appliances. If you aren't making $5 to $7 an hour in spare time fixing Appliances for friends and neighbors within a few months after enrolling, my name isn't McCahill.

The reason I'm no doubt Thomas, is because the staff at NRI is composed of experienced instructors who guide you through the course with more personal attention than you'd get in many classrooms. With the kind of help they give a student and the kind of course they have, you can be the man in demand in this field — even if you've never rewired a plug, or got fed up with school at the 9th grade.

The best advice I can give you is to clip the coupon below and send for the NRI Appliance Training Catalog. It's free, and there's no obligation. NRI doesn't employ salesmen, so nobody will be knocking at your door. All it will cost you is a postage stamp. Take it from Uncle Tom, the Appliance Repair field needs good men. Now.

MONSTER KING

"Tristan!" Louis cried. "Come immediately. Remove this baggage from my sight!"

Denise Chambray crawled towards Louis. Her soft arms clutched at his droopy ridden body. She raised her tear stained face searching for some show of mercy. "Another chance. Give me one more chance. I promise, I will make you as strong as a farm youth again."

"Liar! Assassin! You'll have your chance! You'll have it with my coals and pincers! You'll have it in my obliques! That will be your chance!"

Death laughed silently as he watched the obsequious Tristan L'Hermite, Chief of Louis' dread Marshalsca sweep into the bed chamber. Three guards clattered behind him. They resembled ravenous dogs straining at the leash.

"Seize the poule!" Louis rantied. "You know what to do with her. Take her from my presence immediately."

Struggling, shrieking, kicking her small feet in a futile attempt to escape the clutching hands which surrounded her, Denise Chambray was lifted into the air. Harsh fingers defiled her girlish loveliness as she was borne down the great stone steps to the underground crypt. Death gathered his cloak around him and followed the macabre cortège. Louis XI had bought himself a few more disease ridden weeks by offering Death a helpless nineteen-year-old girl as a substitute.

The walls of Castle de Plessis were thick. The stones were jagged. They ran with black moisture like open sores. Denise Chambray saw the dark stains on the floor of the chamber to which they'd carried her. The stains had turned a dark brown. She looked up towards the smoke blackened ceiling. Heavy chains dangled down, pointing like skeletal fingers at the stains below.

Piteously she turned to Tristan L'Hermite. "I tried!" she whimpered. "I tried so very hard! But how can a girl make a man young again when he is already more dead than alive? How can she arouse desires which have been destroyed beyond redemption? Why am I to blame for things which happened before I was born?"

An added bonus is a reprinting of A. Niemoeller's Bestiality and the Law, a historical study of bestiality during the past thousand years. Illustrations from many historical sources are included. $3.00

Pornography

By David O. Cauldwell, M.D. Pornography, like all evil, seems to be in the eye of the beholder. No doubt someone will find evil in this book, probably because it is possible to present today, words and phrases as well as illustrations which would have been suppressed only few years ago.

Dr. Cauldwell strips away all false notions and impressions regarding the subject and replaces them with facts and logic. Not a single word has been removed from the original printing which successfully withstood attacks by the Post Office to bar it from the mails.

Included in this publishing is a reprinting of an example of classical Japanese erotica—The Nightless City. This, too, is presented in completely unexpurgated form.

The drawings and photos incorporated indicate the varying concepts of pornography, both past and present. Also included are examples of erotic offerings from countries where pornography is legal. $3.00.

Female Auto-Eroticism

Entitled Female Masturbation, by G. Lombard Kelly, M.D. A new printing of this generally suppressed aspect of female sexuality. Included are monographs by other prominent doctors.

Chapters are entitled: Female Masturbation by G. Lombard Kelly, M.D.; Auto-Erotism in the Female by Edwin Hirsch, M.D.; Artificial Erosion by J. Richardson Parke, M.D.; Childhood v. Adult Masturbation by Bernhard Bauer, M.D.; Masturbation in Girls by Albert Moll, M.D.; Curing Masturbation With Hypnosis by A. von Schrenck-Notzing, M.D.; Self-Masturbating Girls by Barbara Hoffman.

Subjects include: initial experiences, psychic effects, historical aspects, the use of artificial penes and other instruments, lesbian masturbation, normal and abnormal masturbation, techniques employed, frequency, causes and cures, evils of masturbation—real and imagined, masturbation as a sex crime deterrent, psychic auto-erotism, urethral masturbation, personal confessions, etc.

Fully illustrated with historical as well as contemporary drawings and photos of techniques, postures, masturbatory objects, etc. Price $3.00.

In one of the few announced of self doubts, Louis asked, "But my good Tristan, what if I fail at my mission?"

Knowing his kin's vanity, Tristan had the right answer at the tip of his tongue. "Then the crown will not be at fault. A man of such eminence as you, Sire, will only be the victim of a treacherous woman who is unworthy of you. She will be dealt with as any traitor of France."

Thus was born the vicious conspiracy of lust, greed, blood and death. Nobody can say with any authority how many young girls preceded Denise Chambray to the chains of Castle de Plessis' dungeons nor how many followed her. There is no tally of the screaming martyrs who choked on the fumes of their own flesh cooking under the tender flames of the basin ardent.

However it is more than likely that each day which brought Louis closer to the moment of his own demise, caused more and more blood to run into the sluice gutters of the torture chamber.

And Death waited, his gaunt face twisted in grisly irony. He studied the King of France. He saw the gross body become its own instrument of torture, imprisoning Louis' mind. The hideousness of his own being formed a dungeon which Louis could never hope to escape.

HERE again we turn to Scott's power of description to give us an indication of the horrors of Louis' final days of life:

"Indeed, although the reign of Louis had been as successful in a political point of view as he himself could have desired, the spectacle of his death bed might be of itself a warning against the seductiveness of example. Jealous of every one, but chiefly of his son, he immured himself in his Castle of Plessis.

"He never stirred from his chamber . . . and wearied Heaven and every saint with prayers, not for the forgiveness of his sins but for a prolongation of his life. . . . Making any mention of his sins when talking of the state of his health was strictly forbidden.

"So great were the well-merited tortures of this tyrant's death-bed that Philip des Comines enters into a regular comparison between them and the numerous cruelties inflicted on others by his order; and considering both, comes to express an opinion that the worldly pangs and agony suffered by Louis were such as might compensate the crimes he had committed, and that, after a reasonable quarantine in purgatory, he might in mercy be found duly qualified for the superior regions."

Still Death waited impassively in the wings. Now he was the ultimate torture master. As he had served no woman for her beauty, death would serve no monarch—even the all powerful Louis XI, Roi de France.

And finally on a blistering hot August day, Death slipped his invisible strangling cord around his bloated royal neck.

Thus died the tyrant of France on August 30th, 1463. One can only wonder whether Denise Chambray and the other tormented ghosts of Castle de Plessis at last found their eternal rest now that his evil spirit no longer tortured them.

SUSAN is a beautifully built, life-size inflatable doll. (Same price as Judy.)

even get your kicks cheap Herman, for instance, knew certain haunts in Benares where he could get opium for next to nothing. Jean-Pierre could live out his life in Calcutta and never pay for a meal. Debbie and Peter had traveled from London to Katmandu and had spent a little less than $20 doing it.

Why Katmandu? Nobody knew for sure. Between France and India they'd met more than fifty cats who said they were going to Katmandu to spend their Christmases there. I asked them why. Some said it was like a kind of mystical experience. Others said, in effect, "It's the Buddhist kick, man. You know, wisdom of the East and all that jazz."

The real reason, of course, might be hashish. It's cheaper here, of a better grade and easier to get. Kief is also popular. Kief is a powdered leaf mixed with tobacco. The high you get is similar to marijuana smoking.

SO WE reached the Nepal city and we spent our Christmas in an empty one-room apartment with rats crawling over us. Himalayan officials said that more than 200 of us were here. They call us "ostentatious nonconformists," which is egghead language for beatniks.

Now, with Marty and Cynthia behind the table, Pete and Debbie working themselves into a hot session, desire burned in me. Claudia had snuggled up to my back to shield herself from Herman's prying eyes. Her body was warm and soft; I could feel the firmness of her breasts pressing against me. Her hot breath was at my neck and I knew by the way her hand rubbed my shoulder that she wanted to do more than just lie here and look at the slabs on the floor.

At that moment Tony flung a copy of The Rising Nepal across the room and growled, "This place just ain't scene, man. Everybody complains about us."

"Cool it," I said. My body was burning up with the need to take Claudia again.

Tony didn't cool it. He kept yammering. "The Government wants tourists with loot," he said. "And the squares around here—they ain't ever gonna understand us." He raised his arms and looked up, and whenever he did that he looked like somebody in a holy picture because of his black curly hair and black curly beard and the long, fuzzy green blanket which was his only garment. "But the people dig us, and that's what counts. Yeah, communication with the people."

"Cut out," I meant it for everybody except the other two couples.

Tony, Jerry and Jean-Pierre understood. They got up and started toward the door. Herman stayed put. He sneered at me. "I'm going to watch."

"Like hell you are," I jerked my thumb toward the door, glaring at him. He stood up and moved toward us. He looked over my shoulder at Claudia. "Any time you want to know what a real cat can do, see me." He turned, laughing hysterically, and walked out with the others.

I rolled over and faced Claudia. Our lips came together hard. Darkness had settled on the city, so I didn't have to think about the other two couples seeing us. Most world beatniks favor group sex with all the lights on. I didn't. Neither did Claudia. Maybe we weren't quite with it. I didn't know about Claudia, but I'd had my suspicions about myself for some time. I'd spent three years making the scene with the round-the-world beatniks. The way we lived left a hell of a bad taste in my mouth.

Claudia shook me. "Hey, man, you with me?"

I laughed and looked down at her face. Her eyes closed. Her lips parted slowly and waited. I covered her mouth with mine, pressing, probing. And suddenly her body jerked under me as though life had been pumped into it and she was moaning and snaking her fingers into my hair. Our passions exploded in a burst of ecstasy that drained us of emotion and left us breathing heavily.

I didn't move. I kissed her ear. She traced circles on my back with her fingernails. She said, "We'd better get dressed. They'll be back. I don't want Herman to see me naked again."

I heard Peter and Debbie stirring in the dark. Then Marty and Cynthia turned the table right side up. Claudia rose. I stood in front of her. She fumbled with a rag that was supposed to be a dress. I pulled it away from her and urged her close. "No more, Bill." I didn't want any more. I just wanted to hold her close, naked, with nothing between me and those circles and triangles that made up a woman.

Without Claudia, being here in Katmandu would have been a big nothing for me.

We finally agreed to do as Tony asked. We went to Tangiers.

The trip took seven weeks. As soon as we hit the sun-bathed city Tony went ecstatic. "This is the scene, man!" he yelled in the street, flapping his blanket. "There ain't no problems here."

But there were problems. I caught a couple of Tangiers fuzz eying me coldly. We went to a currency exchange bank, turned in our rupees for dirhams and francs, then found a cheap apartment overlooking the Strait of Gibraltar.

Tangiers was like Katmandu in a lot of ways. Hashish was cheap and easy to get. We had no trouble buying matchboxes full of kief. We could also exist on a dirham a day (20 cents) if we didn't mind not eating well, which was no drag at all because I hadn't eaten well since I'd left L.A.

But there was trouble. Lots of it. For me, personally, and for the group.

TANGIERS FUZZ kept rounding us up in outdoor cafes in the medina and pushing us onto the ferries that ran to Spain. We'd always come back after a few days, but it was no fun getting kicked out of a country. Maybe you couldn't blame Tangiers officials. The spring tourist season was coming and they didn't want us contaminating anybody.

Then the big thing happened—the thing that made me decide about the crazy way I lived.

The gang went beggaring one afternoon. They fanned out into the dark, narrow alleys and tried to make themselves more pitiful-looking than they were.

I didn't dig begging. If I had to beg for the loot to get myself turned on, then I wouldn't turn on, that's all. I headed back to the apartment.

The door to our room was open. I heart racing and heavy breathing and cursing coming from somewhere inside.

A girl's voice said, "No, no...please...."

It was Claudia.

One look told me I was too late.

She was on the floor. Her dress had been ripped off. Hermans was naked, too.

He was taking her, right now, as I stood in the doorway too stunned to move a muscle.

She was as limp as a rag doll, her head rolling from side to side while the bastard forced himself on her. The sweat-sheen of her skin and the bruises indicated she must have put up a hell of a fight before she'd given in. There were deep gouges on his back and some of them were bleeding, but now he laughed into her sobbing face because he'd overcome her desperate efforts to avoid him.

I moved. Fast and quiet. Like a panther. My foot sank deep into his side. He howled and rose up and off Claudia and rolled. I dove for him. My knee dug into his groin and killed the last. He screamed, clutching his loins. I stood my knee again, this time to squash his face. He folded up

If a hadn't been for Claudia I would have killed him.

An hour later we were at the ferry slip. She held my hand, but said nothing. In a little while it was time for her to climb aboard. She said, "Thanks for not trying to change my mind."

I nodded.

There were no more words between us. The ship pulled out of the harbor and I watched it until it was a dark speck in the blue Mediterranean.

She was going home. Back to Dijon.

I found the gang in the Cambah. Everyone was excited about the dithanks he'd collected. Except Tony. Tangier had already become a drag for him. He nudged me. "Know where the son's gonna be for Christmas, 1967?"

I shook my hand.

"Mexico City. The sooner we get moving the better."

The scene kept changing. I'd made the senior with the bennies no matter where it was, but now I'd had it.

I went back to L.A. and scrubbed myself for a week.

WOMEN WHO WANT TO DIE

Another important point is, why had she run into the park instead of away from it? Despite her mounting fears, she should have realized that no help could be found along its dark paths.

Or might it be closer to the truth to assume that her direction of "escape" tied in with her subconscious motivation?

Ask, also, about her admonition, "No, go away." Was it the strongest she could have used? Of course not. Would a rapist become discouraged by it? He certainly would not!

Finally, let's examine her statement made to the police. "I thought he was going to kill me. And I almost wish he had."

Could it be that she was expressing a death wish?

SHOULD you suspect that this is an isolated case, listen to what a top authority on sex crimes has to say on the subject. Dr. Harold Greenwald made the observation: "The 'victims' of sex assault are often isolated types, filled with repressions, who can never bring themselves to acquiesce openly to any form of intercourse. They actually seem to feel a need to be raped in order to indulge in sex at all. So, subconsciously, they are led into situations in which rape becomes a possibility."

In his book, The Psychology of Crime, Dr. David Abramson wrote: "There is frequently . . . a certain relationship between a criminal and the victim he chooses and we find this the case when a man commits a sexual assault. The offender often creates the circumstances (of which he too becomes a victim), but the victim herself unconsciously also may tempt the offender. The conscious or unconscious biological and psychological attraction between man and woman does not exist only on the part of the offender toward the woman but also on her part toward him, which in many instances may to some extent be the impetus for his sexual attack."

JOHN W. HODGE

JOHN W. HODGE

JOHN W. HODGE

JOHN W. HODGE

Often a woman unconsciously wishes to be taken by force (consider the theft of the bride in Poor Gyntax). We sometimes find this seductive inclination even in young girls, in their being flirtatious or seeking out rather dangerous or unusual spots where they can be picked up, thus exposing themselves more or less unconsciously to sexual attacks."

Keeping these sober thoughts in mind, we wonder how many of the 25,000 forcible, statutory and attempted rapes that took place in this country last year were actually provoked by the victims themselves.

An incident which took place at an airport in New York City recently is an overwhelming condemnation of women who harbor, as Dr. Abrahamson calls it, "the unconscious wish to be raped."

A 19-year-old college girl on her way home for the Christmas holidays hailed a cab at the airport in order to make her late-night transfer to an airport a half-mile away.

The driver stopped at a dark and lonely area, climbed in the back seat and made an attempt to rape her. The girl fought him desperately. She suffered two black eyes and multiple bruises, but managed to escape. She caught a bus and rode it until she found a candy store still open. There she telephoned the police.

When the driver of the cab was caught he confessed to the attack and to five others. But none of the other women had reported him. Why? Fear of embarrassment? Fear of publicity? Nonsense. They hadn't preferred charges against him because his attempts to rape them had been successful — because they hadn't resisted as much as the 19-year-old girl and because they unknowingly wanted to be raped.

In the authoritative book, Medical Jurisprudence, the author tells us: "The opinion of medical jurists is very decisive against it. The consummation of a rape, by which is meant a full, complete and entire coition which is made without any consent or permission of the woman, seems to be impossible unless some very extraordinary circumstances occur. For a woman always possesses sufficient power by drawing back her limbs and by the force of her hands to prevent the insertion of the penis while she can keep her resolution entire."

Cervantes proves the point in his book Don Quixote when a judge is confronted by a robbing peasant girl who tells him that the defendant forcibly took her maidenhood. The judge cupped his hand and asked the girl to stick her finger in the hole he made. Every time she tried, he moved his hands.

"I can't if you don't be still," she snapped.

"Oh," said the judge. "And I wager that if you had not been still the man you say assaulted you could not have done so either!"

Granted, women in our modern society are supposed to be provocative. It's part of their sexual role to entice the male with whatever means are at their disposal. Unfortunately, too many of them are completely unaware of how far they should go; the lonely, the frustrated, those eager to prove how attractive they are, will transcend the man's point of no return and then wall like banshees when they're raped.

As one observer said of heavy petting in high schools and colleges, "I suppose the ideal girl is still technically a virgin but has done every possible kind of petting without actually having had intercourse. This gives her assez-faire, while still maintaining her maiden dignity."

A survey of 110 women at Pennsylvania State University is fairly indicative of the not-as-unconscious desire to provoke attack.

Forty-six of these college women admitted allowing male students to fondle their breasts. Another 34 had engaged in mutual masturbation and 21 said they'd undressed for men.

But these are the tame, the kind of women who might well stand beside the rapists in court and take similar punishments. Into this category must go the drives of the female masochist to be hurt and humiliated. What better excuse can they find to satisfy their cravings than to permit themselves to be raped? Here, too, we might place the female who drinks to excess when she's alone with a man. She knows what can happen. She knows that liquor is an aphrodisiac. Yet she'll drink heavily and then run screaming to the police when her companion attempts to rape her.

No deference to the normal woman who finds herself in trouble, it should be stated that even she unconsciously signals a would-be attacker that she is alone and does not expect to meet anyone. Mrs. Therese Melchionne, director of the New York City Policewoman's Bureau, said: "A woman has little to fear

If she remains alert and takes advantage of whatever protection the situation affords. The first mistake the average woman makes is to display fear if she believes she is being followed or watched, as I have observed on subways and buses. She'll twist her pocketbook, glance around fearfully, or knot her handkerchief in a ball—all signs clearly revealing that she's alone and expects no one to meet her. This is just the information a thief or rapist is after. She should try at all times to create exactly the opposite impression by appearing calm and sure of herself."

The question that arises is how many of these so-called "normals" are unconsciously hoping that someone will see these signals of distress?

The same can be said for the exhibitionist who appears at a window or a door with her body almost completely exposed. Dr. Frank J. Caprio, an expert in the field of sex crimes, once questioned a male exhibitionist who exposed himself one morning while delivering eggs to a housewife.

A cursory glance at the incident would indict the man. But Dr. Caprio delved deeper. "He told me that this particular woman—married and very attractive—would come to the door wearing a transparent negligee and engage in a friendly conversation with him. He was aroused by this and one morning the incident happened. The woman, of course, did not know that unconsciously she was inviting trouble."

We can't agree with the doctor. We believe the woman knew perfectly well that she was arousing the delivery man (what woman is not conscious at all times of what she is wearing?) and that the only reason she responded at the last moment was probably because the man's crude approach did not suit her.

In some isolated instances, the law is beginning to wake up to what a provocatrix can do. Two young men in Illinois were tried and convicted for raping a girl in the woods. The evening in question had started as a double date. One of the girls was taken home, the other raped.

Why only one? Both were equally attractive. Why was the victim chosen over the other? These questions did not arise until the appeal. Then it was learned that the victim had disappeared with one of the men earlier in the evening. She showed signs of willingness. She gave the man good reason to believe that she might enjoy sexual intercourse.

The new evidence was sufficient for the court of appeals to reverse the decision.

In another case a girl said she was forced to submit to the defendant's advances because he threatened her with bodily harm. The court said it wasn't enough. The man was released.

The woman in a rape case has the best of it in court every time. This has been so for the last fifty years and hours out what Sir Matthew Hale said in England 227 years ago: "It is true rape is a most detestable crime and therefore ought to be severely and impartially punished with death. But it must be remembered that it is an accusation easily to be made and hard to be proved and harder to be defended by the party accused though never so innocent." Italics are Hale's.

No one can argue that the rapist is anything but the most despicable of criminals. But it is important, too, that women take a second look into their own consciousness. It's important that they learn about prevention—conscious, unconscious or subconscious—in order to mitigate, at least, the threat of rape. END

PASSION AMOUR

Four Deuce convoy would be a burden. The convoy wouldn't be minded by rice heads. Tough, well-trained, well-armed soldiers of the Viet Cong's vaunted Ta Dal (Dragons) Division would want it, according to the informed.

The Sukha laid under the jungle until Brotsky was sure no VCS were in the vicinity then they got up and trudged toward the Dust Trail, the road the Four Deuce convoy would use.

Soon they came to the Dust. They plodded through the jungle which flanked it for two angry hours before Brotsky said, "We'll set up here."

He and the others scouted the jungle on both sides of the Dust then began to bobby the road. They didn't do it with Claymores—they might have three several places and it would be impossible to carry mines for so many bushes as they used collapsible field spades and a WWII Jap trick. They dug a 3-foot deep trench at 45 degrees across the Dust Trail, covered it with heavy-leaf branches then concealed them with dirt so there appeared to be no gash in the road.

"Remember the program," Brotsky panted, "... the first convoy may not be the Four Deuce outfit. If it's a little outfit we hose it with the M60s. If it's a big outfit we radio HQ and let the zoombies blow it."

No one argued. Brotsky had guts and he was tough but he wasn't going ho. When it came to VCS he figured the odds and if they didn't stock up he didn't get stupid.

The grim little sergeant and his radioman, Pvt. Criswell, laid in the foliage on the west side of the Dust. Meanwhile Cpl. Lachner and Pvt. Madrich sprawled on the other side of the road. These were positions from which the SACs could stink a convoy's survivors with crossfire.

THE WAITING was interminable; insects, heat and humidity tormented the Sukha. It seemed an eternity before they heard the approach of a truck convoy.

Soon—VC drivers travel at high speeds to frustrate snipers—the front wheels of the furthest truck of a 5-vehicle convoy dropped into the trench the Sukha had dug.

The big truck flipped onto its top, crushing its driver and armed escort, then glided down the road with its wheels in the air. Meanwhile drivers WIVES: is your marriage REALLY FULFILLED?

Are you and your husband receiving maximum satisfaction from your relationship?

Bring a new dimension and a new level of happiness to your married life by heeding the wisdom of the Far East. As every woman knows, there is more to marriage than housekeeping and there is more to the marital relationship than "going to bed." But, how many of us are actually in the know when it comes to the wonderful arts of love? You can increase your pleasure, happiness and satisfaction a hundredfold by learning the lessons taught in THE 48 WAYS—a fascinating Japanese book, now available in this country for the first time. Yes, in sexually-enlightened Japan, there has been a frank dissemination of heretofore hidden or forbidden information on the man-woman relationship. ILLUSTRATED IN FULL COLOR, this easy-to-understand treatise, describes and pictures, the attitudes women should adopt to guarantee their husbands, and themselves, the maximum fulfillment of their love. The information contained in this book has previously been confined to medical-type publications. Now, the hard-to-understand terms and the confusing psycho-analytical descriptions of "problems" have been eliminated and the vital facts are presented in frank, full color photographs.

BONUS: For those women who have had children: THE 48 WAYS includes a section on exercises which will help you to have a more dynamic sex life. (Fully illustrated, of course.)

BRIDES TO BE: Are you truly ready for marriage?

You may have heard some of the topics discussed in this book whispered about or laughed over at parties, but unless you are fully informed about them you cannot hope to be as satisfactory a wife as your future husband will want and demand, nor will your married life be as thrilling as you hope and deserve.

MEN: This book contains all the information you've always wanted

The burden of making the marriage relationship work generally rests on the man. Fairly or not, it is up to him to demonstrate the ability to bring fulfillment and satisfaction. THE 48 WAYS gives you the facts, shows you the attitudes, enabling you to leave no stone unturned in performing your part.

If your doctor has not given you a copy of this book, order from the publisher.

"With HEs...and take your time. There's nobody here but us chickens."

He and the others ran into the jungle and flopped behind the biggest trees they could find. Then, after the bombers struck they went back to the road. "Keeripes...." Brotksy said, looking around. There wasn't enough of anything—trucks or Four Deuces—to even recognize. And amid this jumble of metal were the ghastly remains of the drivers and their TA Dol escorts.

HE RADIOED HQ. "A hundred per cent," he reported. Then he said, "Don't send the Hueys for us just yet . . . we got a little unfinished business to take care of."

Before the dispatcher at HQ could ask what it was he flipped off the radio. "Now," he said, grinning, "let's find out if those dolls are really virgins."

If they were, Lochner muttered hopefully, they wouldn't be for very long.

It was an interminable mile, even though the S&Ks hurried. When they came to the glade they reconnoitered to make sure the truck hadn't become a VC trap. But no slopes were lurking in the flanking jungle so Brotksy said, "You guys flip coins. Odd man stands guard."

Shadrick lost. "How long have I gotta stand guard?" he said miserably.

"One hour," Brotksy said. "Then Criswell. Then Lochner."

He opened the truck's rear door and told Heih'h'u and two others to come out. "No!" Heih'h'u said. "We won't...."

"Drag 'em out," Brotksy said.

Soon the S&Ks and the women were in the jungle. "Lord . . ." Brotksy gasped a little later. If Heih'h'u had been hostile when she was jerked out of the truck she was far from it now.

When she no longer wanted to love, which was a long time later, Brotksy took her back to the truck and selected another woman. He was no skirt hound but he had been a long time and he had a lot of catching up to do.

For the rest of the day and throughout the night the S&Ks loved the little Vietnamese women whom, they happily discovered, actually had been virgins.

When dawn came Brotksy said with a grin, "We've had it....let's go home." He told Criswell to radio HQ and tell them where they were.

Soon a Huey whirred over the tops of the trees and dipped into the glade where the VC truck was parked. The S&Ks got in and immediately the big helicopter zoomed up.

Then the gunner saw the VC girls. He swung his machine gun toward them. "No!" Brotksy yelled, grabbing his arm. "They're civilians... female civilians. They ain't armed!"

"How do you know so much about them?" the lieutenant who piloted said, turning toward Brotksy.

Brotksy, lighting a butt, said it was a long story.

Hell with telling this lieutenant, he reflected, looking down at the girls. The looey looked like the type who'd either get green-eyed jealous or blast to the brass....

Besides, what went on down there of a personal nature was none of his cotton-picking business. END good to have a moment's respite. He kept his hand there. "You see how generous I am? But how can I hold my hand there always, eh? It is tiring." He yanked it away and the next drop of water that struck seemed almost solid rather than a liquid.

A pain started behind my eyes. My lips drew tightly across my teeth. Every drop sounded like a bass drum in my ear. The Cubans ciliated over my torment.

BY dusk they tired of watching me. When the Chinese informed them that the process of losing my mind would take until the following morning, the men fell to drinking again and renewed their interest in the women.

Soon I was alone. The Chinese had returned to their ship and the Cubans had dragged the women to other parts of the building. I heard whimpering. Occasionally, a scream would shatter the silence. It didn't take any particular strain on my imagination to know what was happening.

My own pain was too great now to care. Every drop was like a sledge-hammer blow. My head ached. I fought back an urge to scream. I struggled to free myself from the straps that held me to the floor. Panic seized me. In a few hours my sanity would be gone. I was powerless to prevent it and I could expect no help from the mainland.

I thought about the mission. May-be I could force myself to shut out the constant dripping and the pain. I closed my eyes and concentrated hard on what the chief had told me. There had been a large influx of narcotics flooding the country for the past six months. The stuff had seeped through Mexico and some southern ports. Cuba was immediately suspect, but U-2 air recon had not been able to pick up shipments of poppy seed on their film. All of which meant the stuff was being dropped at an outside port and fed into Cuba in small lots to avoid detection.

This Key was the outside part. The illicit commodity would more than make up for the loss of Cuba's sugar and tobacco market. By growing their own opium and smuggling it into our country they could get their economy back on an even keel with enough left over to underwrite subversion, revolt and guerrilla warfare.

My head was splitting. Think of something else. Try. Force yourself.

Moonlight played on the drops as they hung suspended from the water bag I watched them fall. I winced as they pounded my forehead. I tried to nudge the bags that held my head in a vice-like grip, but they were too heavy.

Drop after drop . . . endlessly . . . I couldn't think of anything else. The pain was too severe. I wouldn't last until morning. Or even another hour. I choked on the need to scream. I was determined not to let them know I was quickly approaching the end of my endurance.

A slim hand suddenly appeared out of the darkness and stopped the dripping water. Then the bag was moved so that the drops splashed on the floor.

Blessed relief I relaxed and shut my eyes. I didn't care who my benefactor was. The torture was over; that was all that mattered right now.

A towel was applied gently to my forehead to sop up the water. I looked into the face of the woman to whom I'd refused help. I started to speak, but she pressed her finger to my lips. She bent low and whispered, "They wake easily."

I didn't have to tell her what I wanted done. She slid the bags of seeds away from my head, then worked my hands out of the straps. A few minutes later, and with her help, I was able to squirm free.

My first thought was to get to my skiff, but a glance through a window killed it. Two guards stood a few yards from the building. Rifles were slung across their backs.

The woman pressed herself close to me and whispered, "Now will you take me with you?"

"Who's going anywhere?" I pointed to the men outside.

Her dark eyes sparkled in the moonlight. Her hand disappeared under the tight band of her panties and came out holding a knife. "We can rush them."

I thought about the possibility, but rejected it. Even if we reached them before they fled, their cries would alert the others. I shook my head.

Her tanned body slumped. She sagged against me and buried her face in my shoulder. "I want so badly to kill them." She muffled her sobs in my shirts. I shoved her away from me and told her to shut up.

SOMEHOW, I'd have to get out of here before the woman woke.
At the moment I didn't know how it would be done, but I had a hunch.

there was less conviction in my voice now. Her warmth was reaching me. I lifted her until our lips met again. I was being coerced, knew it, and was unable to stop it. She was simply too beautiful, too alive with passion. Her arms wound around my neck and she clung to me, her breasts heaving with the ecstasy of this moment, her moist lips making promises and delivering.

The night was considerably shortened. Because of Mirta.

BUT my problem was not solved.

Now, with dawn coming, my chance of escape was slimmer. I was about ready to give up hoping when the thought occurred to me that so long as I couldn't get out, the smart thing to do would be to get the Cubans out. I told Mirta to get back to the guy she was shacking up with. I shifted the water bag to its original position, then stashed myself among the bags of poppy seeds.

The sun was high when the fat Cuban shuffled into the room and saw the empty straps on the floor. He let out a howl. "The gringo is gone!" He hurried to the sleeping quarters, screaming like a woman. Seconds later the room was filled with Cubans. Lastran hurled curses at everyone, particularly the two guards who tried to assume him that I had not gotten by them. For their efforts they took the back of Lastran's hand across their mouths. He raised his weapon over his head. "Search the island. He must be found!"

I waited until the last man plunged through the door before squirming out of my hiding place. Mirta smiled. "You are free now." The other four women watched me. I saw the hope in their eyes. I also saw the results of some rough treatment on their bodies. I just couldn't risk taking them with me. Hell, they were women. What did they know of fighting, if it came to that. Suppose they folded up on me? What if I was forced to race at top speed? How could they keep up?

I stared straight at Mirta and said, "I'm sorry." She smiled at me and shrugged her shoulders. Her eyes filled up. She turned away so I wouldn't see the tears. I felt like the grand-daddy of all the lice in the world, but it didn't make me change my mind.

"Stand still, gringo!"

The fat one. I'd forgotten about him. It was his job to guard the women. He'd been doing that yesterday when I was brought here.

He walked around me, looking pompous and proud of himself. He held a revolver. His fat face opened in a satisfied grin. He jerked a thumb over his shoulder. "They will see what Chico has done. They will say at last, 'Chico is not loco. He is very smart, eh?'"

But Chico was not smart. His task was to one of the women. I saw her hand slip inside her panties and come out with a six-inch blade in it.

I saw the look in her eyes, the sudden curl of her lip. Another woman moved slowly until she too was behind Chico. A knife appeared in her hand, and in her eyes, too, was the look of a killer.

The weapons rose high simultaneously and were plunged into the fat man's back. He convulsed. The blades were drawn out and driven again, this time into Chico's chest. He sank to his knees, gagging. One of the blades flicked across his throat; the other sank hilt deep into his blubbery stomach. He pitched forward on his face and there was no need to check his condition.

I was shocked. My jaw hung slack. Not until this moment had I realized the extent of the women's hatred for the Fidelistas. My estimation changed. Maybe they could help in a fight.

I picked up Chico's gun and told the women to follow me. We left the building in a low crouch. The Cubans were hundreds of yards ahead of us, mere specks on white sand. They were spread out. Beyond them was the cove in which my boat was beached. We'd have to wait until they moved off to another area before we could reach it.

WE lay against a dune and watched them. Mirta was beside me. She squeezed my arm. "Gracias."

I didn't meet her warm gaze. I wasn't sure I was doing the right thing. Maybe I was crazy, but I felt that anybody who wanted freedom badly enough to kill for it deserved a chance.

The figures had turned around and were coming back this way. I saw Lastran approach them from another direction. Then a Cuban yelled something that dashed my hopes to pieces.

"Lastran, we found his boat. We sank it. He is still here."

The women groaned. I beat my fist against the hot sand. "That's

it. We can play hide and seek, or give up."

Mirta shook her head violently. "No, we will not give up."

"We don't have much of a choice now."

"We can fight."

"Against rifles and a machine gun? It's stupid." My anger melted. I smiled at her. "But anything's better than the water torture."

We slid down the dune and stayed low. The only area left was the dock, where some of the cargo still piled high. It offered more protection than the dunes and there was a good chance that the men wouldn't go there until they gave up the search.

We kept moving until we were behind the stacks of poppy seeds and wooden crates. I peeked around one of the bags and discovered that I hadn't figured correctly. Eight of the men were headed towards us. Apparently, they wanted to take advantage of the shade cast by the stacked cargo.

I told the women to be quiet. They held their knives ready. I could see the lust for blood coming into their eyes again. They made stabbing motions with their weapons. I had a feeling that when the time came I wouldn't have to tell them what to do.

The men sauntered into the shade. I heard some sitting down. They yawned and stretched and made remarks about what they'd like to do to me when I was caught again.

Two of the women were climbing to the top of the seed bags. The others bounced impatiently on the balls of their feet, ready to spring.

A figure came running down from the building. He waved his arms and shouted, "Chico is dead and the women are gone!"

A blood-curdling scream electrified the fated air. It was Mirta, high above me. She and the other one leaped down on the men. I scampered around the cargo with the revolver working. Two of the Cubans spun as my slug hit them. The other three women attacked from the other side, catching the men with their backs to them. I saw blades sink into their throats. The women were screaming as they slashed away. I fired at two more Fidelistas. Both dropped. Mirta climbed the back of one, pulled his head until his throat was exposed, then slit it.

Another woman sank her blade into a hairy chest four times. Another drove her knife deep into a Cuban's gut and twisted the blade. I mashed up one of the rifles and

Why not get where the big pay and action is? Men urgently needed to

INVESTIGATE ACCIDENTS

No previous experience required. Car furnished; Expenses paid. NO SELLING

Even while you read this, more than 2,000 accidents, fires, and windstorms are occurring across the U.S.A. Insurance and transportation companies are in dire need of men trained to investigate and adjust the thousands of claims that result from these incidents. Such claims are required by law to be settled quickly, yet there are hundreds of cities and rural areas where there are not enough men to handle this vital work. This creates a golden spare-time or full-time opportunity for men.

College Education Not Required

We are training scores of accident investigators by mail and helping to place them in the fast-growing, highly profitable Accident Investigating Field. No previous experience is required. A car is furnished; or car expenses are paid. Many men earn while they learn. Only average education is required.

Some Men Make More in a Day

Than They Formerly Made in a Week!

Dave Duran, investigator, has income 50 per cent, or more, he became an Accident Investigator. Bill Waddell's company has given him a fat raise every year. He now has a handsome five-figure income. Anthony Allen, a college graduate and registered pharmacist, switched to Accident Investigating and almost doubled his earnings. Bob Pritchard reports companies in his area are offering qualified investigators as much money as college graduates are getting. Read more about these happy men and their new careers in our FREE Brochure.

We Help You Find the Job You Want

Only 15 minutes reading a day puts you on the high road to success as an accident investigator. Keep your old job until ready to switch. Many men get their diplomas in a matter of weeks! (We give you FREE Employment Help through our nationwide PLACEMENT SERVICE—or show you how to start an investigating business of your own at home.) Dozens of big companies with job openings are making good use of our monthly graduate list.
